Hispanic and Latinx people were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

The Hispanic and Latinx population in the United States is second in size only to the white population.¹ The 2018 DAPP report found that 6 percent of people in philanthropy identify as Hispanics or Latinx.

The Hispanic and Latinx population in the United States is second in size only to the white population. The 2018 DAPP report found that 6 percent of people in philanthropy identify as Hispanics or Latinx.

Hispanic and Latinx people working in philanthropy were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

Hispanic and Latinx people working in philanthropy were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

While Hispanic and Latinx people comprise nearly 10 percent of the population, they represent only 4 percent of board members of foundations with a social justice focus, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx person on the board of a foundation with another focus. (We know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

Hispanic and Latinx people working in philanthropy were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

Hispanic and Latinx people working in philanthropy were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

Hispanic and Latinx people working in philanthropy were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

Hispanic and Latinx people working in philanthropy were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

Hispanic and Latinx people working in philanthropy were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

Hispanic and Latinx people working in philanthropy were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

Hispanic and Latinx people working in philanthropy were more likely to identify as lesbian, gay, or bisexual than other respondents. However, the 2018 DAPP survey could not identify a single Hispanic or Latinx transgender person in philanthropy. (Again, we know they exist but are highly underrepresented.)

© SEPTEMBER 2020, HIP/CHANGE PHILANTHROPY

INTERESTED IN BEING CONNECTED TO MORE RESOURCES ON HISPANIC AND LATINX PEOPLE? Contact Hispanics in Philanthropy Hispanics in Philanthropy (HIP) is a national transnational network of foundations, donors, and nonprofits, and we are making meaningful investments in the Latino community by developing new resources so they can effectively address the most pressing issues confronting them. In the Latino region and beyond. To learn more, visit HISPANICONLINE.ORG